

What is a CMS and why do I want one?

Content management systems or CMS's are the next evolution of your static HTML website. CMSs use an active database to store all of your website information and then they display that information through a template every time someone clicks on your site. In this way your website rebuilds itself with up to date information every time it gets clicked on.

Read our sidebar on CMSs for more information.